Price argues that the government's desire to help people has led it to create a system of entitlements that is unsustainable. This system is based on the idea that everyone is entitled to a certain level of income, housing, and healthcare, regardless of whether they have earned it.

The problem with this system is that it is too expensive. The government simply cannot afford to provide everyone with everything they want. As a result, the government has had to borrow money to pay for these entitlements. This has led to a massive increase in the national debt, which is now over $20 trillion.

The national debt is a ticking time bomb. If the government does not take action to reduce the debt, it will eventually be forced to default on its obligations. This would have devastating consequences for the economy and for the American people.

Price offers a number of solutions to the trillion-dollar problem. He argues that the government needs to reduce spending, raise taxes, and reform the entitlement system. He also believes that the government needs to encourage economic growth by reducing regulations and taxes.

Price's book is a wake-up call for America. He shows us that the government's good intentions have paved the way to a trillion-dollar problem. It is now up to us to fix it.
