Babylon is an outstanding example of man's ability to achieve great objectives, using whatever means are at his disposal. All resources the resources supporting this city were man-developed. All of its riches were man-made. Babylon possessed just two natural sources: fertile soil and water in the river. Classon 50 This quote is an introduction how life is like in Babylon, and how limited the resources were with the exceptions of the two. Babylon wasn't fortunate.

Babylonian engineers diverted the waters from the river by means of dams and immense irrigation canals. Far out that arid valley went these canals to pour the life giving waters over the fertile soil. This
